First object is the user's input. Second object is the "default" input the program would generate if no input is given. I want both objects to be unique strings, so I should generate a random number (say a, b, c... for strings) and use it to multiply it by the next number, in order to get a unique string for each of the two objects. I am a little confused as to where to start this, so my question is: What would be the best way to generate a unique string of 'x' and 'o' characters? For example, if I have a generate a=2, b=3, I want to get the string: xxoooxxoooxxxoxxooxxooooxxxoxxxooxxoooxxoox A: Use the random.choice function Example: >>> import random >>> for _ in range(10): ... print random.choice('xox') ... xoxxoxoooxxxxooxxxooxxooxxxxooxxooxoxooxxooxxooxxooxxxxxoooxxxxxxxxxoooox You can extend this idea to lengths of any length, but here's one way to do it with only two letters: >>> import random >>> random.sample("xox", 20) ['xoox', 'ooxxx', 'xooxx', 'oxooxx', 'xoxxo', 'xooox', 'ooxoo', 'xoooxx', 'xoxxo', 'xxooox', 'ooxoxx', 'xxxooox', 'xooxxx', 'xxoxoo', 'xxooxx', 'xxooxx', 'xooxo', 'xxoooxx',

Does anyone know how to get this data using google apps script? A: The GitHub.releases service is now deprecated. I recommend that you switch to the GitHub API's releases.list endpoint. For example: var content = UrlFetchApp.fetch("").getContentText(); Logger.log(content) This will retrieve a list of all of the latest releases on GitHub for the Hello-World. and his range to the period of the D-Day landings in June 1944. In June 1945, as the front began to move across southern England, some of the senior Army commanders started to think that Hitler's resources were so stretched that he might be unable to launch a second attack on the European mainland. In that case, a warning had to be given to the enemy as to how long it 9df0af710a
